The selected faculty member will teach six courses during the academic year, most likely three or four at the graduate level in our MBA, M.S. in Information Technology, or M.S. in Data Science program, and two or three in the B.S. in MIS program. Graduate courses meet for three hours one night a week. Some graduate courses may be a blended format meeting face-to-face for six hours during Week 7 and Week 14 on a Friday or a Saturday with the rest of the course online. Undergraduate MIS courses meet twice a week for two hours during the day over a seven-week term. Research, especially that leading to publication in refereed journals, is supported, and encouraged. Rank will be commensurate with experience. Multiple-year contracts will be considered for the appropriate candidate and funding availability. Courses may include: MIS 571, MIS 3720, MIS 500, BUS 3010.

The ideal applicant will have a PhD in MIS or a closely related area with teaching interests related to data and its storage, analysis, and use in businesses. The applicant should be prepared to teach our introductory MIS and database courses at the undergraduate and graduate levels, and perhaps Business Intelligence. ABDs may be considered.
