Position description

The Institute for Business and Social Impact at UC Berkeley seeks to hire a candidate who applies pioneering and rigorous analysis to policy relevant topics in the fields of applied economics, development, finance, and labor, or other related fields. Ideal candidates will have strong training in empirical methods in economics and/or in designing and overseeing large randomized controlled trials. This position frees scholars from teaching and administrative responsibilities, allowing them to focus on research during the early stages of their careers. The postdoctoral scholar will have many opportunities for intellectual exchanges across the UC Berkeley campus.

Duties of Position:

The position offers direct engagement in new and exciting research opportunities and personal mentorship from faculty and other researchers on the team. Scholars will gain an expanded network of collaborators and become members of the UC Berkeley research community by actively participating in seminar series and taking advantage of various internal workshops to present and receive feedback on
